WOULD-BE REAGAN ASSASSIN RELEASED FROM PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Would-be presidential assassin John Hinckley Jr. was released from a psychiatric hospital on Saturday, media reports said, 35 years after he shot President Ronald Reagan in an attack prompted by a deranged obsession with the actress Jodie Foster. Hinckley, 61, is moving in with his elderly mother in a gated community in Williamsburg, Virginia, where he has been making increasingly long furlough visits in recent years under the watchful eyes of the Secret Service. A federal judge in July ordered Hinckley's release from St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington, finding that he no longer posed a danger to himself or to others. Hinckley was found not guilty by reason of insanity at a 1982 trial and was diagnosed with depression and psychosis, both of which are now in remission, according to his doctors. REUTERS

DOZENS INJURED AFTER PORCH COLLAPSES IN CONNECTICUT

2 Dozens of people were injured on Saturday after a porch crowded with partygoers collapsed in Hartford near Trinity College, authorities said. Between 30 and 40 people were being treated for injuries, none of which appeared to be major, Hartford Police Department Deputy Chief Brian Foley said in postings on social network Twitter. Police and fire responders were aiding the injured. The Hartford Courant newspaper reported that 23 people had been taken to hospitals. "We are very lucky that there were no fatalities and no known critical injuries from what could have been a truly tragic incident," Mayor Luke Bronin said in a statement. The collapse took place during an off-campus party at private housing near Trinity College, Foley said. The third-floor porch collapsed onto the second-floor one, which then fell to the first floor. FRANCE'S PREMIER WARNS OF NEW ATTACKS, 15,000 PEOPLE ON POLICE RADAR

3 French Prime Minister Manuel Valls said on Sunday there would be new attacks in France but proposals by former president Nicolas Sarkozy to boost security was not the right way to deal with threats. The French capital was put on high alert last week when French officials said they dismantled a "terrorist cell" that planned to attack a Paris railway station under the direction of Islamic State. "This week at least two attacks were foiled," Manuel Valls said in an interview with Europe 1 radio and i-Tele television on Sunday. Valls said there were 15,000 people on the radar of police and intelligent services who were in the process of being radicalized. REUTERS

MERCURY RISING BY MIDWEEK

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

On this day that I'm writing, Sept. 11, and as a native New Yorker, I want to send my prayers to the families of our fallen heroes and to say we will "always remember." Your resiliency is remarkable.

The football season has returned and so has some cooler temperatures after a week of record heat across chunks of the Northeast. The atmosphere is in the relaxed stage after days of the meandering, maddening Hermine, making your Labor Day holiday one that was tough to digest.

Hermine was followed by late season heat and humidity and now a return to more seasonable September conditions as we try to readjust to the work and school grind and packed weekend in the cities once again, as beachgoers become city dwellers.

Temperatures will begin to heat up by midweek, but then a swift moving cool front will usher in a nice, comfy Canadian air mass as the mercury will hover mainly in the very pleasant 70s with low humidity for both Thursday and Friday. Boston, you might actually dip into the 60s on Thursday.

The upcoming weekend will start out dry, however a very moist return flow of air on Sunday will lead to an increasing chance of widespread showers and possibly storms by later Sunday into early Monday.

Keeping an eye on the tropics

A strong disturbance in the eastern tropical Atlantic should become more organized over the next 72 hours and most likely become the ninth storm of the season and take on the name Ian. Long range computer models indicate that if indeed Ian does develop, it should not pose any threat to the coastline of the United States as a blocking high-pressure ridge should deflect it out to sea.

Gun groups challenge attorney general's 'wars' against firearm industry

Attorney General Maura Healey recently launched an investigation into two gun manufacturers following a ban on assault weapons this summer.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
letters@metro.us

Attorney General Maura Healey NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

The Gun Owners' Action League (GOAL), a Massachusetts gun rights advocacy group, is amping up its challenges against moves by state Attorney General Maura Healey to intensify enforcement of the law banning assault weapons.

The organization debuted a new series of political signs this past weekend that advertise their site HealeyHurtsFamilies.com, which details efforts to stop what they call abuse from Healey's office after recent battles against the gun industry.

This summer, the attorney general's office announced that an estimated 10,000 "copycat" assault weapons were sold in Massachusetts last year, which prompted Healey to issue a notice saying she will step up the enforcement of the state's assault weapons ban.

"What she did on July 20 was to virtually make 20,000 families felons-in-waiting overnight by changing the rules," said Jim Wallace, executive director of GOAL.

Most recently, Healey launched an investigation into the safety of guns made by two major manufacturers, Remington and Glock. Both companies have challenged Healey's requests for documents in court.

"It's kind of ancillary to what we're dealing with," Wallace said. "Obviously what she did on July 20 is only the beginning."

The investigation concerns guns produced for sale to members of the general public in the United States, not just within Massachusetts, according to Suffolk County Superior Court documents on Healey's response to Glock's petition.

"There are scores of public reports about defects involving firearms, including accidental firing, misfiring, overheating problems and low 'trigger pull' leading to horrific stories of accidental shootings by children," said Cyndi Roy Gonzalez, Healey's director of communications, in a statement. "As the chief law enforcement office in Massachusetts, we are seeking that information to better inform our residents and to protect them from any safety or manufacturing issues with guns sold here."

Healey requested records of all complaints about the safety of firearms and ammunition, or that concern accidental discharges, within the previous four years, according to court records. She also asked for information on recalls, safety features such as load indicator or a magazine safety disconnect and how trigger pulls were tested, as well as documents on any warranties provided to gun purchasers and specifications on marketing or advertising the guns.

"She's waging two wars at once against the firearms industry, against manufacturers and retailers and at same time against law abiding citizens in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," said Jake McGuigan, senior director of state affairs with the National Shooting Sports Foundation.

McGuigan said that as the firearms industry's trade association, the foundation is putting together a case against the attorney general to "challenge her decision to basically throw out 18 years of the way we were doing business" following the July law changes.

Both McGuigan and Wallace made comments saying that to them, these issues were about more than just banning or controlling assault weapons.

"I think the Massachusetts public, if not the American public, needs to get the message that if she can do this to us she can do this to you," Wallace said.

"I believe the attorney general is doing this more for political gain. I think she realizes that this is her opportunity to attack the firearms industry whether it's through the decision in July to ban firearms that have been sold in state for many years or to actually go after our manufacturing companies," McGuigan said. "We are not the only industry under attack by the attorney general's office right now."

The attorney general's office says that the gun industry lacks transparency unlike the manufacturers of "nearly every other consumer product sold in this country."

Health officials look for clues into falling birds in Dorchester

Officials have warned residents to watch their pets.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

The birds were identified as grackles, seen here. ISTOCK

Health officials might know this week what caused 47 birds to fall from the sky in an area of Dorchester.

Twelve of the birds, identified as grackles, have died and 35 were found alive in various conditions, said Lisa Timberlake, director of publicity with the city's Inspectional Services Department, in a statement.

Grackles are a member of the blackbird family. Timberlake said that many of the alive grackles were lying "almost motionless on the ground" while some were able to fly with difficulty and others only able to "walk or stumble."

The Animal Rescue League, along with Inspectional Services, Environmental Services, and the Department of Public Health, launched an investigation into the incident, which focused on birds found on or near Bakersfield Street in Dorchester.

Willien Pugh, 67, who lives on Bakersfield Street, first reported the incident to the city, according to the Boston Globe, after her outdoor cat had become sick and died. She described the birds as "lethargic, trying to roll over, not able to stand up or fly."

City officials immediately started looking for a cause, from a virus to environmental poisoning and even possibly something intentional, according to NECN.

Timberlake said that the city believes three cats in total may have been affected as well.

Investigators do not believe there is any danger to humans, NECN added, but they are warning pet owners to watch out for what their pets put in their mouths while outside.

All animals in various states have been sent to the state lab for testing, according to Inspectional Services.

Families remember 9/11 victims 15 years after attacks

Pentagon GETTY IMAGES

Relatives in the crowd embraced and some held photos of loved ones and signs that read: "Never to be forgotten," "We miss you" and "Gone too soon."

Americans remembered the victims of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks on Sunday at a ceremony marking 15 years, with the recital of their names, tolling church bells and a tribute in lights at the site where New York City's massive twin towers collapsed.

As classical music drifted across the 9/11 Memorial plaza in lower Manhattan, family members and first responders slowly read the names and delivered personal memories of the almost 3,000 victims killed in the worst attack on U.S. soil since the 1941 bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Tom Acquarviva's 29-year-old son Paul was one of 658 employees of financial services firm Cantor Fitzgerald who perished after the first plane struck the north tower just below where they worked on the 101st to 105th floors.

"Not a day goes by that we don't remember him," Acquarviva told Reuters.

Angela Checo honored her brother, Pedro Francisco, 35, who was a vice president at investment and wealth manager Fiduciary Trust on the 96th floor of the south tower.

"He was coming down but forgot someone and went back upstairs to save them," Checo said. "That's why he never made it down."

The ceremony paused for six moments of silence: four to mark the exact times four hijacked planes were crashed into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon near Washington, D.C., and a Pennsylvania field. The last two record when the North and South towers of the Trade Center crumpled.

It was held by two reflecting pools with waterfalls that now stand in the towers' former footprints, and watched over by an honor guard of police and firefighters.

More than 340 firefighters and 60 police were killed on the that sunny Tuesday morning in 2001. Many of the first responders died while running up stairs in the hope of reaching victims trapped on the towers' higher floors.

Attendees hold photographs of lost family membersn GETTY IMAGES

At the Pentagon, a trumpet played as President Barack Obama took part in a wreath-laying ceremony.

"Fifteen years may seem like a long time. But for the families who lost a piece of their heart that day, I imagine it can seem like just yesterday," Obama said.

No public officials spoke at the New York ceremony, in keeping with a tradition that began in 2012. But many dignitaries attended, including Republican presidential hopeful Donald Trump and his Democratic rival Hillary Clinton.

Trump said in a statement that it was a day of sadness and remembrance, but also of resolve.

"Our solemn duty on behalf of all those who perished ... is to work together as one nation to keep all of our people safe from an enemy that seeks nothing less than to destroy our way of life," Trump said.

Clinton said in a statement that the horror of Sept. 11, 2001 would never be forgotten, and paid tribute to the victims and first responders.

Houses of worship throughout the city had tolled their bells at 8:46 a.m., the time American Airlines Flight 11 slammed into the North Tower.

A second pause came at 9:03 a.m., when United Airlines Flight 175 struck the South Tower. American Airlines Flight 77 hit the Pentagon at 9:37 a.m., then the South Tower collapsed at 9:59 a.m.

At 10:03 a.m. United Flight 93 crashed near Shanksville, Pennsylvania, and the final moment of silence was observed at 10:28 a.m. when the North Tower fell.

As evening fell across New York City on Sunday, scores of 7,000-watt xenon light bulbs projected two giant beams of blue light into the night sky to represent the fallen twin towers, fading away at dawn.

The "Tribute in Light" was first set up in 2002, six months after the attacks, and has become part of the annual memorial service. The beams reach four miles into the sky and can be seen as far as 60 miles away on a clear night, organizers say.

In the twin towers' place now rises the 104-story 1 World Trade Center. Also known as the Freedom Tower, it is the tallest skyscraper in the Western Hemisphere, at 1,776 feet

Native Americans celebrate pause of North Dakota pipeline, vow to fight on

The Obama administration temporarily halted construction on federal land of the planned pipeline that has angered the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, and asked the company behind the project to suspend nearby work.

Native Americans protesting construction of a North Dakota oil pipeline near land they consider sacred on Saturday quietly celebrated the U.S. government's decision to pause construction on federally owned land, and vowed to press for a full halt to the project.

The move came shortly after a federal judge in Washington, D.C., rejected a request from Native Americans for a court order to block the project.

The government's action reflected the success of growing protests over the proposed $3.7 billion pipeline crossing four states which have sparked a renewal of Native American activism.

The Standing Rock Sioux, whose tribal lands are a half-mile south of the proposed route, say the pipeline would desecrate sacred burial and prayer sites, and could leak oil into the Missouri and Cannon Ball rivers, on which the tribe relies for water.

On Saturday, many activists in Cannon Ball, North Dakota, touted the latest victory, but said its temporary nature meant they would not end their protests, echoing Friday statements by Standing Rock Sioux leaders.

"This could go all winter, and into next summer," said Lance Dorian, spokesman for a group from the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota that has set up camp on the south side of the Cannon Ball River, on Standing Rock land. "We're in it for the long haul."

His tribe had set up big Army-style tents as well as a kitchen.

With prayer and song as well as the occasional drum beat in the background, activists vowed not to leave.

"We won the day," said environmental activist John Wauthen from Tuscaloosa, Alabama. "There's a long fight still ahead of us."

Opposition to the pipeline has drawn support from 200 Native American tribes, as well as from activists and celebrities.

USA VEIN CLINICS TO OPEN IN FRAMINGHAM, MA ON SEPTEMBER 14

Framingham, MA, September 12, 2016 – USA Vein Clinics will open a new center in Framingham, MA on September 14, 2016. The clinic will be located at 855 Worcester Rd., Suite 13, and will serve patients Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Under the leadership of USA Vein Clinics founder Dr. Yan Katsnelson, a renowned Harvard Medical School trained vascular specialist, and a highly trained staff that includes board-certified physicians and specialists, USA Vein Clinics has become a pioneer in modern vein treatment. And now, residents of Framingham and surrounding areas have the award-winning vein treatment center right in their backyard.

"We are honored to help the people of Framingham and around the nation," says Dr. Katsnelson. "But the real success is not in the number of clinics we operate, but in the thousands of patients we have successfully treated. Most of them come to us for cosmetic reasons—they simply want to get rid of their unsightly varicose or spider veins—not realizing that many of them are experiencing symptoms of a condition called "venous insufficiency," which can cause serious complications if left untreated."

Persons experiencing leg aches or cramps, heaviness in the legs, restless leg syndrome, itching or burning in the legs, discoloration or non-healing wounds in the legs or ankles are urged to call and schedule a consultation immediately, even if they do not have visible varicose veins.

"We are excited to bring our clinic to the Framingham area," says Dr. Katsnelson. "Treatment is quick, effective, non-invasive. The procedures are covered by Medicare and most insurance plans. It makes sense—both for your health and for your looks—to get varicose veins examined and treated as soon as possible."

To schedule a consultation, call USA Vein Clinics at (617) 858-6870.

PEACE, POLLS AND PIPELINES

If you haven't seen those photos of Bill Clinton and Donald Trump hanging out at the golf course, get Googling. No doubt the pics have both campaigns ordering antacids by the case. On the other hand, if you want to know what to watch for this week in politics, read on.

1. GIVE PEACE A CHANCE
Just as the polls were swamping Democrat Hillary Clinton's hopes for a runaway victory (at least for now) she is getting good news from across the ocean. The announcement of a U.S./Russian plan for a cease fire in Syria has given her bragging-rights-by-proxy which she will use to pound Republican Donald Trump. After a week focused on foreign affairs (her strong suit — not his) it's just the kind of success she needed. And if you throw in that a new poll shows public faith in the U.S. economy is up ... hey, it's all good news for the Dems.

2. OILY RULING
The White House rode to a late rescue for the Standing Rock Sioux tribe last week, halting construction on an oil pipeline in North Dakota hours after a court said the work could go ahead. However, the move came after staunch protests by Native Americans and environmentalists, and you can bet pro-business Republicans will accuse the president of playing politics. But watch for the next move and for Clinton to take the real heat. And not just from the right. She was already under fire from lefties for not speaking up ("Paging, Miss Sarandon!") so she'll be hit with questions about the issue if any journalists can get close enough.

3. TRUMP STAYS STEADY
Meanwhile, although Trump excited criticism last week with his bromancing of Vladimir Putin, the candidate is considerably more disciplined lately. He's sticking to the script more often, and sanding down the rough edges on some of his more inflammatory positions. If he keeps that up, he could open the door to a lot of voters who have so far written him off, but who aren't yet thrilled about their alternatives. Hang tight and watch the polls.

Highlights from New York Fashion Week

TINA CHADHA

Alexander Wang

Alexander Wang had a surprise up his sleeve on Saturday night. The designer debuted his new hush-hush collaboration with Adidas Originals following his fashion show. Here's everything that went down.

The runway

The spring collection kicked off with some boardroom-meets-boudoir basics (cropped white shirts; pinstriped tap pants; sexy, lace-trimmed blazers) before heading to the beach. The surfers and skate punks who run this seaside town prefer distressed jeans, leather board shorts, chill neon parkas and louche bikini tops made from shirting. The show encapsulated all the attitude and youthful rebellion that make Wang's collections so exciting. It was a knockout.

Zoe Kravitz, Nicki Minaj and, of course, members of the #WangSquad, Tinashe, Kylie Jenner and Tyga sat front row. But the person who stole the spotlight — even from, dare we say, her mom Madonna — was 19-year-old Lourdes Leon.

The after-party

Tommy Hilfiger wasn't the only one with a carnival on his mind. At #Wangfest, as the designer called it, partygoers were treated to mallrat munchies. There were pop-up McDonald's trucks doling out fries and burgers, a 7-Eleven kiosk with Slurpees galore and convenient stores setup with all the Skittles and Snickers fashion folks could fit in their bags.

Christian Siriano tackles runway diversity

Christian Siriano is on fire. Michelle Obama wore one of his dresses during her speech at the Democratic National Convention; the designer launched a bridal and plus-size collection earlier this year, and the 30-year-old just presented a spring show of chic cocktail dresses and stunning, colorful gowns to rave reviews. But the big talker this season: his diverse model lineup. In a Fashion Week that kicked off with a scathing op-ed in the Washington Post by another "Project Runway" alum, Tim Gunn, criticizing the industry on its lack of options for average-size women, it was both refreshing and reassuring to see a designer step up. Not only did Siriano cast models of various sizes, but he featured an ethnically diverse lineup, as well. We caught up with Siriano right after his show.

Why did you decide to include plus-size models in this season?
It was all about diversity this year. We wanted different ethnicities and women of all shapes and sizes. I just think that's what's happening right now in the world. There's a lot of hate going on. So it isn't about having plus-size women, it's about celebrating everyone. Fashion is fun and it should be that way.

We loved the glam gowns, tell us about them.
We looked at a lot of vintage photos from the '60s and '70s of Jackie O in Capri on holiday. I was trying to give my customer that perfect holiday — and pack her bags for her.

When did you find out Michelle Obama was going to wear your dress to the DNC?
I was on my sofa watching. At first I didn't even know it was mine, because I was nervous. I was like "that's probably not it, but it looks really similar."

All eyes on Monse

Designers Laura Kim and Fernando Garcia of buzzy label Monse made headlines last week as the new creative force set to take over at Oscar de la Renta next season (the duo actually clocked in over a decade at the storied fashion house). But on Friday, they dazzled showgoers with a collection of deconstructed menswear staples and exquisitely tailored feminine looks. White shirts, pinstripes suits and cargo pants were spliced into glam off-the-shoulder ensembles and eveningwear turned it up with sequins. The collection — bursting with fresh ideas — added a much-needed creative jolt to the show cycle.

Why Laura Linney loves Clint Eastwood

The Oscar nominee talks about her small but key role in the director's new film, "Sully."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In Clint Eastwood's "Sully," Laura Linney plays Lorraine, the wife of Chesley Sullenberger (played by Tom Hanks), the pilot who safely landed a damaged commercial plane in the Hudson River in 2009. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Laura Linney loves her some Clint Eastwood. Since 1997's "Absolute Power," the actress and filmmaker have worked together thrice: as Sean Penn's Lady Macbethian wife in "Mystic River" and, now, as Lorraine, the wife of hero pilot Chesley Sullenberger (played by Tom Hanks) in "Sully." They've all been small but key roles; in "Sully," she only has a handful of scenes, all of them on the phone with her husband after he's landed a broken commercial aircraft in New York's Hudson River, saving everyone on board. The Oscar-nominated and Emmy-winning actress, 52, talks to us about what she learned from the legendary filmmaker/actor and what "Sully" says about experience.

Tell me about the first time you met Clint when you made "Absolute Power."

I remember it vividly. "Absolute Power" was maybe my third big role in a movie. I had been cast because he had seen an early cut of "Primal Fear." So I didn't audition for it. I just got this unbelievable phone call out of the blue. I showed up on set in Baltimore and was taken to meet him. And he turned around and there he was, tall and handsome and kind.

And you had to deal with his famous habit of only shooting a few takes, which must have been shocking coming from theater.

It's a skill. When I was doing "Absolute Power" I learned that, "OK, in Rome, do as Romans do. Here's an opportunity to learn how to work this way." I learned I had to be as prepared as I could be, so I could be as relaxed as I could be. Then the work can actually happen. Because if you're stressed and nervous, you're not going to do your best work. And if you're not prepared you're going to be nervous. The human response is to tense up. You have to train yourself to do the opposite. I learned how to deal with my own psychology so I can be ready to go for him. I've taken that knowledge with me on every other movie I've done. It helps a lot.

GETTY IMAGES

The way he made "Sully," it becomes an interesting look at someone who is uncomfortable with being called a hero, and worries that he might not have done the right thing.

And there's also a confirmation that experience matters. Experience counts — more than a computer simulation, more than an algorithm. Actual human experience is a valuable thing, in a world where it's not valued right now. It just isn't. Everybody likes to belittle the advantages of getting older. But experience is pretty good when you've got it.

I have at least some experience, I think.

It's good, isn't it? Isn't it nice?

And then there's this idea that even if you're very experienced that you need to change course sometimes, try new things.

Yes. It's the balance between having a sense of experience and still trying to learn — still wanting to be better. If you're too knowing, that's just boring, and you're stunted and you're obnoxious. If you're too open and you negate all of your experience and don't lie back on it, then you're not being authentic to who you are and what you've been through. It's an interesting active state to be in.

Karmin wants to know your sign

Karmin struck gold — well, actually, platinum — with their 2012 hit "Brokenhearted." PROVIDED

The duo are back with a zodiac-inspired sophomore album.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Nick and Amy Renee Heidemann-Noonan of Karmin have some theories about Netflix's hit "Stranger Things."

"The whole next season is going to be about finding Eleven again," says Nick. "It'll have something to do with that snakelike creature they planted inside of those people. It's harvesting. Will already threw up that bug."

The Berklee grads binge-watched the season while preparing for their tour in support of their sophomore studio album, "Leo Rising," due out Sept. 9. The follow-up is a punchier departure from their sweet, soulful pop 2012 debut, "Hello," following the signs of the zodiac to inspire each of 12 tracks. The couple — who are both professionally and romantically intertwined — call from Los Angeles, their new home, where they're in the midst of moving in and renovating.

How did the inspiration to do a zodiac concept album come about?

Amy: We have a strange story about this. About two years ago, on our birthdays, the band and the crew gifted us a meeting with an astrologer. At first we were like, "Uh, this is interesting …" but we thought we should go and humor them. It turned out to be a meaningful event for us. The astrologer put us in touch with a spiritual side and gave us perspective as to what we're doing with our lives. We decided after that to leave our major label, and as the album took shape, each song became a persona.

One thing to note — the album has 13 tracks, but there are only 12 zodiac signs. What's the straggler?

Nick: Well there's a secret 13th sign. [Laughs] No, the album is 12 songs, with a bonus track.

Amy: The bonus track is one that's inspired by political and global events.

Nick: We're reaching a point now [as a band] where we're a growing community and we can comment on those things.

Each song is correlated to a different zodiac sign — so what came first, the characters or the music?

Amy: They started as characters. I like to write lyrics like it's coming from someone else — you have to get out of your own head.

Nick: We tried to take characteristics [from the signs] and represent them in the lyrics. Like, Cancer is focused on home and family, so ["No Suitcase"] is a song about a person who is trying to find those things. And Sagittarius is fun-loving but they can also be a heartbreaker so you get a song like "Blame It on My Heart."

Did you ever feel trapped in the idea of a "concept album" once you started writing it?

Nick: The idea didn't start to make sense until two or three songs in. "Sugar" and "Don't Know You" — we were like, "Oh, that sounds like a Gemini song …" because it bounces back and forth like dual personalities. It was organic like that.

One of the songs is a cover of "Pure Imagination" from "Willy Wonka" — which, with the timing of Gene Wilder's passing, is both sad and poignant.

Nick: That was one of Amy's favorite childhood movies.

Amy: He was such an inspiration — all of his work is incredible. When he sings that song, it's so timeless and unforgettable. We were so thankful we were able to get permission to put it out and add our own verses.

You guys usually keep quiet about your personal lives, but am I right in saying a big milestone for you this year was getting married?

Amy: We're married, and we're loving it. Though it doesn't feel all that different now.

Given your working and personal lives collide, do you find that puts your relationship on the table all the time?

Nick: Pretty much.

Amy: But we don't mind it either. We're like, "Whatever."

The ultimate binge watch

"Cheers" gets the live stage treatment.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

"Cheers" put Boston on the main stage, with class-spanning characters — both bar regulars and those behind the counter — that were so wacky, funny and memorable that it made even the most curmudgeonly of residents seem endearing. And now, the series will come to life once again, 23 years after its last episode, and Sam Malone and Diane Chambers will flirt and bicker before your very eyes in the touring open of "Cheers Live on Stage" at the Citi Shubert. Grayson Powell, who plays Malone, and Andrew Sellon, who will play Eric Fitch, a mysterious bar patron, fill us in on what to expect.

Don't watch the spoilers

The stage show is based on the first season of the series, tracing Sam and Diane's arc from when they first meet through their tumultuous budding romance. Sellon and Powell say dedicated fans who remember those episodes well won't be disappointed — they remain true to the show — but hope that audience members will still be surprised.

"They've artfully selected sequences and favorite moments from Season 1 — you're not going to see Fraiser, but you'll see Coach," explains Sellon, whose character, should you not be an avid fan of the show, you may not remember.

Diane and Sam
PROVIDED

Need a drink? The cast has been schooled in the way of "Cheers"

While they're divided between patrons and staff, Powell says that the cast had to learn to work in a bar, before they even stepped on the stage. "On the show, they're always mixing drinks and taking orders and doing inventory. We had to learn all of that before we did staging and blocking and learning lines," he says. "We learned to mix and match all of those factors — and then we started acting."

Powell even worked as a Cheers greeter in Faneuil Hall before a summer stint with Shakespeare on the Common in 2010, and says a few months at the original Bull & Finch has him well versed in show knowledge.

"We were required to watch as much 'Cheers' as possible," he remembers. "And with this show, people are always coming up to ask us what our favorite episode was or our favorite moments. So my 'Cheers' acumen is definitely there."

And don't worry, even on stage, everyone will still know your name

For both Powell and Sellon — a Belmont native and Harvard grad — opening "Cheers" in Boston feels like a bit of a homecoming and they hope it will for fans, as well.

"The level of detail is so awesome that fans will get the vibe of belonging as soon as they walk in," says Sellon.

"We want them to see that bar and hear the cast and feel like they're walking into a home away from home."

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Going back to school can be intimidating, but there are plenty of resources for seasoned students.

LAKSHMI GANDHI
@LakshmiGandhi
lakshmi.gandhi@metro.us

Students 25 and older made up roughly 40 percent of all college and graduate students in 2009 — and by 2020, 9.6 million older students are expected to head back to campus, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

"I teach returning students and I'd say the average age of my students is 39. The oldest student I've ever had was 82," says Dani Babb, a college instructor and CEO of The Babb Group, which helps online professors find job opportunities.

Babb shared her tips for readers who are getting ready to return to the classroom — and finally finish that degree.

Explore programs designed for returning students

"There are a lot of programs now that are geared towards adults," says Babb. "Also, the instructors tend to be used to seasoned students; we know what the students are going through."

Talk to your boss

Balancing school and a full-time job is tough for even the most organized student. "The more you can explain your degree as workplace applicable, the better," Babb notes. Before you chat with your direct supervisor, head to your HR department. "Find out if your company has a policy for [tuition] reimbursement."

Get your family onboard

One of the biggest obstacles returning students face is balancing parenthood with their studies. "One thing I tell students is to make sure you have family who are fully supportive of what you are doing." Babb suggests regularly talking about your classes and goals with your family.

Bring a 'back to school' attitude to work this fall

Because channeling positive, clean-slate energy at work is as good as a brand new box of Crayolas.

JENNIFER SAWYER
letters@metro.us

For kids across the country heading back to school, September means new classes, new school supplies, new friends and (hopefully) a new eagerness to learn. For adults? Well, the fall can seem like … more of the same.

But what if those in the professional world approached autumn a little more like a child going back to school? Andrew Mellen, organizational expert, speaker and author of "Unstuff Your Life" says the fall is a great time for adults to channel the same positive, clean-slate approach.

"Summer is over, but instead of that being a drag, there's an opportunity to focus on the things you really want to get done in the last four months of the year," Mellen says. So if your "back to school" looks like "back to the fluorescent lighting of my office cubicle," keep the following tips in mind.

Just like kids heading back to school, adults can apply the same clean-slate approach to their jobs. ISTOCK

Refresh your space

Just as students organize their lockers, adults can get in on the creativity when it comes to their work spaces. Stacked papers? Messy drawers? Fall is the new spring when it comes to cleaning. "Dispatch the clutter, find a proper home for things, and let go of what's not serving you," he says. "The more open space you have, the more you are going to be thinking clearly."

Make new friends

Just like a new school year paves the way for friendships in the classroom, the fall is a great time to reboot your work relationships. Mellen suggests revisiting collaborative projects and approaching them with a new outlook, letting go of grudges and past tensions with co-workers.

Learn something new

The fall is the time to pursue growth opportunities that you might have been postponing and embrace learning something new. "Just the act of putting yourself in a learning mode will bring an enthusiasm and excitement that will affect your attitude at work as well," Mellen says. "You'll be more open because you've had an opportunity to express yourself in a way distinct from what you would normally do."

The Red Sox have a whole lot to play for as the days get shorter and the end of David Ortiz's career, as well as the postseason looms large. TOM SZCZERBOWSKI

AL East playoff race, David Ortiz bring meaningful baseball back to Fenway Park

The next 20 games are mightily important for the Red Sox.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

Get ready, Red Sox fans. It's been awhile.

For the first time since the 2013 World Series, there will be meaningful baseball played at Fenway Park in the fall. This week's games against the Orioles and Yankees will be the most important games the team has played at home since the Red Sox beat the Cardinals in the 2013 World Series.

Beginning Monday, the Red Sox will play host to the Orioles for three games and then the Yankees for four games, which will go a long way toward the Red Sox' playoff chances. Of the Red Sox' final 20 games, just 10 are at home. This week will be crucial as the Red Sox need to take advantage of playing at home and not depend on winning on the road.

Over the weekend, the Red Sox played in their first real game with a playoff atmosphere in Toronto as the Blue Jays averaged almost 45,000 fans over the three game series. Although there won't be as many fans at Fenway Park this coming week, the atmosphere should be more of the same.

And what a good feeling it is.

There is something to be said for meaningful baseball in September and October. In no other sport can every little decision the manager/coach makes be questioned and that is what makes meaningful baseball so late in the year so great.

Not only is the team in a pennant race, it's also the end to David Ortiz's career, which makes it even more exciting. Going into play Sunday, Ortiz is batting .316 with 31 homers and 107 RBI. He also has a league-leading 45 doubles, as well as a AL-best .619 slugging percentage. Not many people can say they ended their careers with a season like Ortiz is having and better yet, it's in the middle of a playoff push.

Perhaps no one in Boston sports, besides maybe Tom Brady, has the fans behind him like Ortiz has this season. Even when the designated hitter runs wind sprints before the game, the crowd gives him a tremendous ovation. And for good reason. Ortiz is one of the greatest players to ever play the game and he's ending his career in style, looking nothing like a player that will turn 41 years old in November.

If you can, get out to Fenway Park this week. Ortiz's final home games, in the midst of a pennant race — what more can you ask for?

Week 1's early games did not lack drama.

LUKE MILLER
@LukeFM7
sports@metro.us

Here's a look at the early games from Week 1 NFL action:

Raiders 35, Saints 34
Michael Crabtree had 87 yards receiving and caught a game-winning two-point conversion with 47 seconds left against the Saints. It was a shootout in New Orleans as the Raiders and Saints combined for 995 yards of total offense.

The Raiders were down 24-10 after Drew Brees (28/42, 423 yards, 4 TD) and Brandin Cooks connected on a 98-yard touchdown pass, Cooks' second of the afternoon. Willie Snead had his own touchdown from Brees, and 172 yards on the day.

But it was Oakland and David Carr (24/38, 319, TD) who stole the day on the back of a 22-point fourth quarter. Amari Cooper had 137 yards receiving on six catches, and rookie running back Jalen Richard had a 75 yard touchdown run in the fourth for the Raiders.

Buccaneers, 31 Falcons 24
Jameis Winston (23/33, 281, 4 TD, INT) moved to 3-0 against the Atlanta Falcons in his young career, as the Buccaneers became the only team in the NFC South to start the season with a win. Neither Tevin Coleman (8 carries for 22 yards) nor Devonta Freeman (11 for 20) could get going on the ground for Atlanta, but Coleman led the team in receiving with 95 yards. Matt Ryan (27/39, 334, 2 TD) connected with Julio Jones and new signee Mohamed Sanu for scores, but it wasn't enough.

Ravens 13, Bills 7
The Ravens defense showed their old defensive coordinator Rex Ryan how it's done Sunday, holding the Bills to 160 yards of total offense and one score. That defensive performance and a 66-yard strike from Joe Flacco (23/34, 258, TD) were enough to pull out the victory against Buffalo once a couple Justin Tucker field goals were tacked on. Baltimore shut down the Bills' playmakers, limiting LeSean McCoy to 58 yards rushing and Sammy Watkins to 43 yards receiving.

Texans 23, Bears 14
Several of the new faces in Houston helped them move to 1-0 against the Bears. First round draft pick Will Fuller led the team with five catches for 107 yards and a touchdown. Lamar Miller had 106 yards rushing, and familiar face DeAndre Hopkins caught Brock Osweiler's (22/35, 231, 2 TD, INT) other touchdown pass in Osweiler's Houston debut. Alshon Jeffery had a 54-yard reception on his way to a 105-yard day, but Jay Cutler (16/29, 216, TD, INT) was sacked five times by the Texans' defense.

Packers 27, Jaguars 23
The Jaguars outgained the Packers 348 yards to 294, but in a game where both teams stalled often in the red-zone the Packers found paydirt more often. Aaron Rodgers (20/34, 199, 2 TD) threw for two touchdowns and ran for another. One of the scores was a six yard grab by Jordy Nelson, who had six catches for 32 yards in his first game for Green Bay since the 2014 season.

Chiefs 33, Chargers 27 (OT)
The league was on upset alert as the Chargers took a 27-10 lead into the fourth quarter in Kansas City behind three touchdowns from Danny Woodhead and Melvin Gordon. With just over a minute left in the game however, Spencer Ware scampered into the end zone and the ensuing extra point saw the game tied. Ware finished the day with 199 total yards for the Chiefs, including 129 yards through the air. In overtime, Alex Smith (34/48, 363, 2 TD, INT) found the endzone on the ground to put the win away on the Chiefs' first drive.

Bengals 23, Jets 22
Ryan Fitzpatrick (19/35, 189, 2 TD, INT) was intercepted by Josh Shaw in the final minute, sealing a victory for Cincinnati in a game that was close throughout. Matt Forte had 155 total yards in his Jets debut. A.J. Green was responsible for 180 of Andy Dalton's 366 passing yards and scored on a 54-yard reception in the second quarter. The Jets sacked Dalton seven times.

Eagles 29, Browns 10
Carson Wentz (22/37, 278, 2 TD) and Robert Griffin III (12/26, 190, INT) had very different debuts with their new franchises, as did coaches Doug Pederson and Hue Jackson. Wentz' first drive resulted in the first touchdown pass of his career, a 19-yard fade to Jordan Matthews, who led the Eagles with seven catches for 114 yards. Griffin's receivers dropped several passes throughout, and one resulted directly in his interception.

Vikings 25, Titans 16
The Vikings sent the Eagles first and fourth round draft picks for Sam Bradford, then let Bradford ride the bench behind Shaun Hill (18/33, 236) Sunday. The Titans took a 10-0 lead in the first quarter, but two defensive touchdowns and four Blair Walsh field goals made up a 25 point Viking run that put the Titans to bed despite two touchdown catches from new arrival DeMarco Murray.

Aries Take action and make things happen. Signing contracts, making negotiations and getting things done will make you look good and help you avoid outside interference.

Taurus Learn from the words or actions of others. If you broaden your knowledge, you will get ahead. Share your ideas, but don't offer to do something for nothing.

Gemini Keep an open mind and a closed wallet. Look at investments that will get you ahead, instead of doing so for someone else. Romance will bring you good fortune.

Cancer Don't fear change or novelty. The experience and knowledge you gain and the people you encounter along the way will enhance your life. Trust in your judgment.

Leo You need to put more effort into making personal improvements or doing things with children or someone you love. Make a commitment to bring about positive change.

Virgo Sign up for something that will keep your mind occupied and your emotions stable. If you give in to pressure, you will end up in an unfortunate dispute.

Libra Concentrate on making personal changes and striving to improve in any way you can. Look for opportunities at networking events or industry conferences.

Scorpio Your ability to find solutions and skillfully implement them will result in an opportunity to represent others and promote what you do best.

Sagittarius Make your point clear to avoid mistakes. A positive change to your appearance or to how you approach creative projects or deal with loved ones will pay off.

Capricorn It's mind that will triumph over matter today. Be clear and concise when delivering information. Listen carefully and avoid presumptuous actions.

Aquarius Express your feelings and be willing to compromise and make changes that will encourage a better understanding between you and a loved one.

Pisces Stay focused on what others do and say. If you jump into something before you have all the facts, you will be disappointed with the results. EUGENIA LAST
